Demographic Information

DSP is always looking to incorporate a diversity of perspectives into our work. DSP defines diversity in three primary ways:

- Lived experience, including people who depend on non-car modes of transportation, victims of traffic violence, and family members of these victims.
- Geography, including neighborhoods, corridors, and other areas affected by residential segregation, redlining, and chronic underinvestment.
- Demographics, including race, gender, economic status, disability, and other demographic categories that directly relate to inequities perpetuated by many decades of transportation policies and practices.

The following optional questions will help us understand the perspectives that you could bring to DSP.
